

Get the Bible out of schools!!!!

Story 1: Students barred from voluntarily reading the Bible at recess. Sound screwy? It is. The story is here.

Story 2: Each student at a Pennsylvania elementary school has a "Me Week" where they are featured in class. As part of this, the student can have their parent read out of a book of their choice. Unless, that is, the chosen book is Bible. The story is here.

I think it is likely both schools' actions will be declared unconstitutional. Neither of these actions by the students in story 1 or parent in story 2 violates the First Amendment. This does reflect two things, though. One, there is a real bias against Christians and the Bible in public schools. And two, most schools don't know their First Amendment law very well.
